A Strange Romance.

She was full of business, this little girl, as with half closed eyes she stood on the curb opposite the post-office, a stamp poised on her tongue, which she was about to affix to the envelope she held in her hand.

But, as she deliberately nibbed it between finger and thumb by one corner, at the same time tightly shutting both eyes (as though such a performance in some mysterious way facilitated the operation), a lady came along, accompanied by a huge dog, which audadously waved its thick, bushy tail right athwart the fittle mad's face, causing her to jump backward into the gutter with a suppressed scream.

Her alarm was immediately increased to terror on missing the stamp, which she next observed floating away attached to the majostic candal appendage.

She feebly started in pursuit, but as she neared the formidable animal the object of her quest became transferred to the lady's jacket, and before she could reach her side it had dropped on the payement, whence it was such a performance in some mysterious way

Commissioners Oppose the Bill Now in the President's Hands.

Recommendations to Congress Regarding the Collection and Distribution of Garbage-Urgent Need for a Plant Which the Contractors Cannot Now Furnish.

House bill 6,895, to regulate water main assessments in the District, was returned to the President yesterday by the Commissioners with the statement that the majority of the Commissioners do not recommend favorable action thereon. They say: "The bill would about, and that he will keep give no power to assess. The present power to assess comes from an act approved June 23, 1873. The bill is to regulate assessments levied for water mains only. The present law fixes a certain tax for 'water mains and fire plugs.' Therefore, if the new act obtained, there would be no assessment for fire hydrants, which by law the water department must erect and maintain. The water department is operated wholly by revenues from water main and fire hydrant assessments and water renfs. A question is thus raised whether the Commissioners would have the power to assess for cost of fire plugs and whether the power to erect these appliances, requisite for the public protection from fire, would not by necessary implication be revoked." levied for water mains only. The present

The letter then states that "the present law levies a tax for water mains and fire plugs of 1½ cents per square foot of lot which abuts on an avenue, street, or alley in which a water pipe may be inid and fire plugs erected. A regulation in conformity with the act of June 10, 1879, applies such rate of tax for a depth of 100 feet on agricultural land or other tracks. of 100 feet on agricultural land or other tracts not subdivided into building lots." When subdivided or a main be laid in another road subdivided of a main be laid in another road through or alongside the tract an additional assessment applies for the ground not included in the former assessment. So it results under the present law that every square foot of private ground first or last pays an equal tax for the main and the hydrant. This cures uniformity of tax and is believed to be the only practicable way of doing so. The uet of June requires that 'water main taxes and water reats shall be uniform.'

AREA MORE JUST THAN PRONTAGE BASIS. The principle of the area basis for the tax. rather than the frontage basis, is believed to be more just and equitable.

"The whoic water service is proportioned as a rule upon the size of the lot. Under the established schedule of water rents, no charge is made for hose washers where Potomac water is used in the house; no charge is made for a bath tub, neither for a faucet nor a water closet, nor for any single use of water at dwellings, except for fountains. The larger the lot the more the hose washer will be used; the deeper the lot, the larger the house, and the more occupants it will contain and the more water will be used. The larger the house the greater the service from the fire hydrants. The number of rooms does not enter into the schedule of water rates, except for hotels and boarding and tenement houses.

"It is considered inadvisable to change the "It is considered inadvisable to change the schedule and charge by volume of water used for domestic purposes. If the bill obtains an owner of a lot deeper than 100 feet will have his water-main tax reduced, whereas the larger number of small owners throughout the city and partly in the county whose lots are generally less than 100 feet in depth, frequently only fifty feet and sometimes less, would have their taxes largely increased and often doubled. The larger lots which this bill, if approved, would almost exclusively benefit, are located in suburban subdivisions, and in consequence of their comparative remoteness and higher elevation can only be moteness and higher elevation can only be reached by the municipal water supply from the Potomac at an extra expense for pumping

The necessity for an im-mediate appropriation, as proposed in the bill, is importative. Heretofore the garbage has been removed from the District by trees. has been removed from the District by trans portation down the river, except for a brief period when it was disposed of by reduction by means of superheated steam, the works for whiten were destroyed by fire shortly after they were put in operation. The disposal of the garbage by means of transportation down the river has become a missage, to the restthe river has become a nuisance to the resi dents of the shores it passes as to raise an opposition which has practically prohibited that means of removing the material. The nuthorities are therefore obliged to resort to some means of destroying or treating the garbage within the limits of the District.

TOO EXPENSIVE FOR THE CONTRACTOR. "This would involve a greatly increased expense, which they cannot reasonably expect the garbage contractor to bear under the rates provided under the existing contract.

"The quantity of garbage and dead animals collected daily is about 100 tons, and inasmuch as it is no longer possible to dispose of the material by transporting it beyond the limits of the District the Commissioners respectfully recommend and urge that pro-vision be made at once for its destruction within the District in order to prevent the creation of a nuisance that will scriously en-danger the public health. The police department is on the verge of another shaking up if Special District Attorney James L. Pugh can bring it about.

During the past few days there have been several cases before Judge Taylor, in which, as usual, policemen appeared as prosecutors, but the evidence brought out demonstrated that there is anything but a good feeling between many of the members of the force, and that whenever certain officers make an arrest for violation of the law, there were others of the force who would try to defeat them when the case came to trial.

The climax was reached on Tuesday, when the cases of Mrs. Bergman, charged with violation of the Sanday law, and Sam Newton, charged with being a vagrant, were heard.

After considering the matter carefully, Mr. Pugh decided to write to Major Moore and inform him of the strange conduct of the officers, that he might at least know what was going on. Accordingly he sent Major Moore at learn, of which the following is a copy:

"I desire to call your attention to a practice that has recently grown up among the officers of the police force, which is, to say the least, very demoralizing and impairs the efficacy of the force, and is embarrassing to me in the prosecution of cases.

"Owing to the factional fights and personal cases and source of the factional fights and personal cases and source of the factional fights and personal cases and source and control of cases.

before the slender form recled slowly to and fro several times and then sank down on the damp grass with a groan.

The morning papers under, the heading of "Shocking Affair at Paddington," contained the following paragraph:

"The evening express from Bristol on entering this station late last night ran into an empty cattle van, which by some unaccountable means had been left on the main line. There was only a slight collision, but an eiderly first-class passenger received such a severe shock to the system that he expired before he could be removed to the waiting-room, where his body now lies."

The evening papers furnished additional where his body now lies."

The evening papers furnished additional details. They said:

"The victim of the deplorable accident reported this morning was Mr. Vincent Hope, of the Firs, Hopetown, Wilts, who was on his way to the continent with his nephew. At the inquest held this afternoon a verdict of death from apoplexy was rendered. The body will be conveyed forthwith to Hopetown for interment."

Two days later Miss Birch was entranced and mystified by receiving the following telegram:

"Why didn't you write in time, sweetheart?" said Cyrii, in mild reproof, to the blushing Millicent, as, imprisoned in his arms, he kissed her again and again.

"I did," was the feeble response.

"But the postmark shows the contrary, darling," he argued. "Who posted it?"

"Little Salile Waters. I sent her off in good time; and, although I have repeatedly questioned her since the receipt of your telegram, she persists in maintaining that she posted it then—safely. Oh, there she is, carrying the pitcher."

Cyrii swiftly strode toward the little maid, posted it then—safety. On, there she is, care rying the pitcher."

Cyril swiftly strode toward the little maid, with whom he entered into conversation, during which some money passed into the child's possession, after which he abruptly left the little one, whose look presented a curious contrast to the amused expression on his face.

"Do you know to what you are indebted, dearest, for this contretemps which has sealed our happiness with a fortune?" he asked on rejoining Miss Birch.

"Faith," she answered confidently, with a look of love. "Ahem! perhaps; but it selected a very unique instrument, it seems."

"What was it, then?"

"Nothing less than the wag of a dog's tail."
